We are looking for a student to help us modernize the practice of family law. Our firm currently uses Clio, a platform similar to Blackboard where clients have their own portal that is shared with their attorney. Clio has document automation capabilities that are developed through “if/then” scenarios. We are looking for someone who can navigate that process to help us automate some of our form documents. In addition, we are looking for someone to bring their creative edge to help us develop additional strategies (incorporating technology/Clio) to simplify and streamline the client experience. This would require a student to learn the very general procedures of our firm and then step in with suggestions of their own. We are happy to run this as an independent study or as a paid internship. For a paid internship, I imagine needing about 2 hours of work/week paid at a rate of $10/hour. The student would be welcome to front load those hours and work on a flexible schedule as the project develops. We can provide apple computers for the student’s use, as well as a work space. A student is welcome to use his/her own equipment if he/she prefers non-mac products.
